250+ Word Bio:

KR Paul blends the adrenaline of military thrillers with the gritty, magic laden drama of urban fantasy. It's part “Justice League” and part “Mission Impossible.”

Kay pulls from her own unique background to craft stories that delve into the harsh realities of military experience. She offset it all with humor, magic, and enthralling characters sure to bring you along for the ride.

Kay was born in California but moved to North Carolina as a child. She grew up rock climbing, horseback riding, hiking, and writing fan fiction like a true 90s kid. Her love of adventure (and being an adrenaline junky) took her into military service where her love of writing continued. She has written non-fiction for business, industry, academia, and leadership education. Through it all, she kept her love of writing and continued to write fiction in her free time.

Now, Kay still works her day job but writes short and novel length fiction when not being an absolute jock or absolute nerd. When not at work, her hobbies include competitive bodybuilding, video gaming, kayaking, cosplay, skydiving, and playing with lightsabers. If you find her on a stage is a toss up whether it's for the competitive bodybuilding, displaying her latest cosplay, or being a panel member for a leadership seminar.

Her work serves up a blend of adrenaline soaked action and the vivid world of urban fantasy. She draws from her own life experiences to fuel the emotionally charged, fast paced, and occasionally outright nerdy plots found in the Pantheon series. She continues to keep adventuring across the world and through her day job, which one day she'll have to quit.
